The "dog days" of summer refer to the hot, sultry 40-day period from July 3 to August 11. The term comes from ancient astronomy and the star Sirius (the "Dog Star"), which rises alongside the sun in mid-summer. Ancient Greeks and Romans thought the combined light of Sirius and the sun caused extreme heat, drought, and bad luck. Ancient RootsStar connection: Sirius sits in the constellation Canis Major (the Greater Dog). Roman name: Romans called this hot stretch diēs caniculares, meaning "days of the dog star". Shared heat: Romans believed the star added its own burning energy to the sun.
